

beckoned from the east. From this moment the House of Savoy began, slowly and imperceptibly, to reorient its interests away from its ancestral lands, towards northern Italy. This geopolitical movement would eventually shift their state's center of gravity across the Alps and turn the House of Savoy into an Italian dynasty, with Turin as their capital city.